

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2007

I send greetings to those celebrating Public Service Recognition Week.

America is a vibrant force for freedom and prosperity, and our public servants are one of our Nation's greatest assets. Individuals at the Federal, State, and local levels of government dedicate their time and talents to help make our Nation a better place. Since 1985, Public Service Recognition Week has provided an opportunity to pay tribute to the talented men and women in the public sector who serve the American people with skill and professionalism.

I appreciate public servants for your diligence and commitment to service. Your good work reflects the best of our country, and our Nation benefits from your spirit and leadership.

Laura and I send our best wishes.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "George W. Bush", with a long, sweeping horizontal line extending to the right.